

Descriptive-exploratory study about bioethical considerations present in interventions to persons with psychiatric disabilities in day hospitals at maule region [Estudo exploratório-descritivo sobre as considerações bioéticas presentes na intervenção a pessoas com incapacidade psiquiátrica nos Hospitais Dia da Região do Maule] [Estudio exploratorio-descriptivo sobre consideraciones bioéticas presentes en la intervención a personas con discapacidad psiquiátrica en los hospitales de día de la región del maule]

Ayala M.P.

This article relates bioethics and psychiatric disabilities. Through interviews with professional teams that representing the unit of analysis, describe the objectives of existing bioethical considerations in interventions for people with psychiatric disabilities are plotted, hoping to contribute a bioethical approach for optimizing these attentions. The research was conducted in the three Day Hospitals in the Maule Region -devices which accord preferential treatment to people with chronic psychiatric disorders- through a qualitative, exploratory and descriptive study. During the course of the study is possible to appreciate that our country is necessary to implement health care models that integrate a pragmatic concepts of justice and fairness as transverse, strongly on their own mental health care, given the particular vulnerability of those users and users; for example, through the development of a community and social bioethics. Finally, it is expected that from this work can generate lines of research that contribute to the progress in improving the quality of care for people with psychiatric disabilities. © 2016, Organizacion Panamericana de la Salud. All rights reserved.

Bioethics

Day Hospitals

Maule Region

Psychiatric disability