

Projections of mining-industrial heritage in the province of Chanaral, Atacama Region, Chile [Proyecciones del legado minero-industrial en la provincia de Chañaral, Región De Atacama, Chile]

Lorca M.

Chanaral Province has a long mining tradition which has meant setting up a territory associated with that activity and thus a mono-productive economy. Currently, the area is facing a complex scenario due to the imminent cessation of the two mines on which economy and employment rely. This article explores the possibilities of the mining-industrial legacy to not only play a symbolic function, but to constitute a resource that enables people to project their future.

Economic diversification

Industrial heritage

Mining

Territory management

Tourism